Why Look at Animals? Quotes Showing 1-6 of 6. “To become bored with eating is to be bored with life.”. — John Berger, Why Look at Animals? “The Creationists, like all bigots, derive their fervour from rejection--the more they can reject, the more righteous they themselves feel.”.

Why Look at Animals: John Berger on What Our Relationship ...

This week Last month, I read Why Look At Animals? – a compilation of essays and musings by John Berger that deal with the role of animals in our modern society as well as meditate over human behaviour, nature, art and human progress. Berger’s standpoints a lot of the time are depressingly Marxist and neo-Darwinist but the writing style is light and accessible and can actually be taken seriously.

John Berger's extraordinarily influential essay, "Why look at ani-mals?" (Berger 1980) is something of a puzzle. It is a powerfully expressed critique of the marginalisation of animals in capitalism, and yet is questionable and over-simplifying in its historical claims. The historical trajectory it outlines of the disappearance of animals
